There are three main types of insurance: life, health, and property. Life insurance provides financial protection for your family in the event of your death. Health insurance covers medical expenses, and property insurance protects your assets from theft or damage.

The fantastic story of the Paris Giron

In the Old Soldier's Memory, It Will Always Live As One of the Most Daring Military Exploits Ever Made

THE Germans' infamous Paris gun—the one that in World War I killed a whole lot of Parisians 75 miles away—is another story, what you might call modern engineering in reverse, propellant loading and guided missiles. But the story of the more-or-less-accurate old cannons are all the most fascinating chapters in the history of warfare.

Barges all shells mounded toward the Allied boats, and on the transport the sharp explosions of the handgrenades penetrated the continuous tide and machine-gun fire. The big guns were silent. The German High Command knew that it had to win this all hands or lose the war. To gain the victory, it employed every means at its command.

Behind the teacher's well hidden in the folds of Gypsy, was one of its hopes. At 4 A.M. on a pale, gray morning, fishermen and crews working the lake began their day. Reports filed into the field as other rains—pages of figures on the weight, price, sex, and maturity of the cat at various distances. The experts calculated, and gave orders to the crew.

A large streamlined shell with a number 3 painted on it was slid into the furnace. Below logs of gaswood, were six fuel pots, were shoved into the firing chamber. The French black was smoky about 1200 was noticed and shortly afterward found the new word order, "Stop!"

Am. Psychol. 42, 1987, 1000-1008.

1. the Pomarin (the Pichelin) But one thing it was never called—Big Bertha. That was the name of a large mortar used by the Germans, and it wasn't until after the war that the Paris gun mistakenly got stuck with a name that wasn't its own.

Clouds of red-orange smoke drifted through the zone after the Paris gun had fired its first shot. Two minutes later, the barrel was still clearing. Finally, after three and a third minutes of flight, the missile exploded at No. 4 Quai de la Seine in Paris.

Although the house was devastated, no real damage was done to the war effort. At 7:45, the second shell landed, a mile and a half from the first, killing eight Germans and wounding 15. Twenty-five minutes later, the third shell dropped, and at 8:17, the fourth. Then the bombardment continued throughout the day, the missiles exploding at an average of one every 15 minutes and forming an irregular pattern of fire around the center of Paris.

Paris was thrown into turmoil. The police thought that an airplane was bombing the city. Newspapers suggested that a German heavy gun had been set up in secret in the French suburbs of Paris and was shelling the city from above. But French military experts guessed the truth.

By noon, when 14 projectiles had fallen, they were able to see that the pattern of shell holes indicated a line of flight that cut the German lines near the forest of Compi. Aerial photographs, taken earlier, showed a railroad line leading into the forest. Finally, thought the French, a great railtransported gun was hidden here. Within 10 hours after the first shell landed in Paris, French batteries were there back at the Kaiser's military headquarters.

On March 18—Paris Sunday—the shells began again. Sometimes, two explosions were heard within a two-minute interval; this showed that at least two guns were in the wood, for the fastest these guns could fire was one round every 10 minutes. Actually, in spite of the German statements that there was only one gun—there were three, but one of them collapsed after only four shots.

On Monday, the impact area of the shells averaged 2.4 miles closer to the German lines than Saturday's average—evidence that the Paris gun, like all big guns, wears its gunning to wear out quickly. During the week, the Germans drew up the shelling in order to preserve the gun barrels as long as possible. On Good Friday, they made their only major hit when a shell struck a church and killed 85 worshippers.

Meanwhile, the German artillery was moving up, and the heavier guns were spaced up with it, until they were shelling the French capital from a distance of only 34 miles. Then the tide turned, and the counter-battery attack with the Germans. Soon, the Germans were attacking so regularly that the Paris gun was more trouble than they were worth. On August 7, they fired their last shot.

By March 22 they had fired 247 shells, killing just over 300 people but causing almost no damage to the French war effort. The worst thing that they did for the Germans was to break their own superstition in gunnery, for each gun was so big and slow in shell as for that many barrels which are designated as almost useless because had to be worked. Today, however, shells are more accurate than those the Paris gun got and the shells are through more flexible in use. But the Kaiser Wilhelm Gunboat will always live in the military's memory as one of the most daring military experiments ever made!
